Updated: 04/01/2018 by Computer Hope Pattern can refer to any of the following: 1. Design template or template file that is created with a shared layout to be used with one or more documents. For example, a program might have a template for a resume. With the resume template, the overall layout is designed with filler text (such as your goal, previous work experience, etc.) that you can replace with information related to you. The program can come with pre-designed templates with the ability to create a user template. When you create a custom template that will be stored and reused or shared, it can contain themed fonts, layouts, colors, thematic effects, background styles, and even content. Design patterns vary depending on the type of work you create, but must share similar themes and patterns throughout the completed work. The design pattern for the photo gallery page will be different from the layout of the history page, which in turn will be different from the contact page. Microsoft PowerPoint has design patterns that help provide a cohesive and visual organization for presentations. Each slide can have a different layout and graphics, but the overall look has continuity. There are templates available for all Microsoft Office programs and other programs such as Adobe InDesign, Google Docs, and other office and design programs, each with similar options. They provide you with areas to post photos and text, or items such as navigation bars and other widgets when you design a website. Companies like Squarespace have hundreds of different templates that can be used by anyone to help create a website easier. 3. When programming, the template can be used as the basis for unique code units. In the NHS, an object-oriented computational language, there are standard template libraries where programmers can select separate template classes to change. An example of this pattern is MFCL (Microsoft Foundation Class Library). Form Letters, Filler, Temporary File, Word Processor Terms by Eric Sweeney Updated September 26, 2017 Fax cover sheets are essential when sending faxes. They help ensure that the fax gets to the right person and inform the recipient who sent the fax. Fax covers also give the sender the opportunity to provide additional information about what is being faxed. Writing and setting up a fax cover sheet is easy. Once it's configured, you can reuse it over and over again. All you have to do is fill in the correct recipient information every time. Add the form to the top of the fax cover. The form may be for the company or Face. The form must include the name of the company or individual, address, phone number, fax number and email address. List a date a couple of lines down from the form. Write the name of the company and then the colon. Write on behalf of the name where you send a fax. Write To and then colon a couple of rows down. Fill in the name of the person who should receive the fax machine. Write off and then colon on the next line. List the sender's name. Write the recipient's fax number and then the colon. Fill in this line with the correct fax number where you fax. Write the number of fax pages, including the cover of the fax and then the colon. Count the number of pages you faxed and add them for the fax cover. Enter this number on this line. This helps the recipient make sure the page is not missing. Write Notes and then the colon. Enter any additional information you need. The fax cover sheet is placed in the front of the fax machine and contains information such as the date and name of the sender and recipient. While a cover is required, they are a good idea to make sure faxes are not wrong. To help, we've created free templates to download and customize along with tips for business faxes. Our downloadable fax cover sheets help make sure nothing slips through the cracks. Pro Tip: Mike Sheety, director of the custom t-shirt design firm that shirt, says: Remember the faxes in black and white, so having the color on the paper can make it hard to read. It also suggests increasing the font on the cover to facilitate readability. Don't go too big, Sheety says. About 12-14 pt usually suffice. Alternatives to traditional fax machines are important for some businesses, but they can be expensive to buy and require a stationary to work with. They can also be to maintain and get services if they break down. Business owners who want to replace their office fax have several alternatives. These alternatives include: Use an online fax service these days, you don't need a physical fax in order to send faxes. There are a number of virtual faxes that allow you to fax by simply downloading a document or faxing through or a smartphone browser. Keep in mind, however, the internet fax is not as secure as from machine to machine fax and your documents can be intercepted without your knowledge. For random faxes, try the free online service GotFreeFax.com. You can send up to two faxes a day with three pages maximum for each. In addition, unlike other free faxes, ads are not faxed. If you need to send faxes more often, we recommend a paid service such as RingCentral Fax. For as little as $9.99 to $49.99 per month, you can send and receive up to 750 to unlimited pages per month. In addition, you get additional benefits, such as mobile alerts, when a fax comes and cloud integration with Dropbox, Box, Google Drive and Microsoft Outlook. Check out our best online fax buyer service guide to find out more. Replace the fax machine with eSignature Software If the reason you're still faxing is to collect signatures, consider using electronic signature software. Instead of printing out a document, signing it and faxing it back, recipients can add a legally binding signature in just a few clicks without leaving their computer. For $20 to $30 a month, SignNow allows users to send a contract via email with simple instructions to the recipient on how to sign and return it. This is a completely paperless solution that neither you nor the recipient ever need to print the documents you exchange. If your customers are more comfortable sending faxes, SignNow also has a Fax-Back feature. Recipients can print the document, sign by hand, and then fax it back to the number provided by SignNow. You will get a copy in your inbox, which means you can support any customer preference without having to fax your own. Read our guide to comparing e-signature software to find out more. Frequently asked questions (frequently asked questions) Do I need to use a fax cover sheet every time? Most of the time, yes. Coverage sheets ensure that your documents reach the recipient and indicate who sent it. Even if you know the recipient is the exclusive user of their fax number (think freelance consultant), fax covering sheets is still the best way to send a polished and professional-looking fax machine. Is the fax cover sheet considered a page? The total number of fax pages allows recipients to know if some pages are being transferred. When faxing a fax, the usual place to include the accompanying sheet in the total number of pages. Most virtual faxes also count the cover as a page, but contact the service provider to see if the covers are counted in the page's monthly allocation. Should I sign The lid of the sheet? In most fax scenarios, you don't need to sign a faxes until your name is marked as the sender. However, legal and medical documents may require the signature of an accompanying sheet, so contact your industry regulator for guidance. Bottom line if you need a simple fax cover sheet to print or want a more elegant template to customize in Word or Google Docs, our free fax cover templates are a quick and inexpensive solution. However, businesses that use fax machines to collect signatures should consider using electronic signature software to improve efficiency.
